Ramat Aviv bank robbers snatch IL2m. amid exploding grenades

By YORAM BAR Jorusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. - Some 50 people yesterday evening watched outside the plate-glass walls of Bank Leumi in Ramat Aviv as four robbers fired their weapons inside the bank, threw hand grenades and escaped with IL1,250,000 and $84,000.

The robbery was described by police as "the most violent in the annals of crime in Israel, more like a terrorist attack."

Yesterday at 5:50 p.m. a white Subaru car stopped at the entrance to Bank Leuml in Rehov Einstein. Ramat Aviv. There were four masked men in the car.

One of the robbers stayed near it while the other three kicked in the bank's glass doors and entered, fir-ing in the air and shouting at the tellers: "This is a holdup, don't anybody move!"

Ten clerks were still in the bank, which was already closed to the public, preparing the day's "take" for transport by security van today. The deputy branch manager and one

As they left the bank the robbers threw another grenade into the building, and one at the spectators outside. The one in the bank failed togo off. The one thrown outside exploded, but no one was hurt.

One of the bystanders, a policeman on leave, took a shot at the getaway car's driver, wounding him in the white Subaru across the field opposite the bank in the direction of the coastal road to Herziya. Five police vans, sirens shricking, drew up moments after the Subaru disappeared. The police removed the mexploded grenade from the bank and detonated it in the open space opposite. Then they took statements from eye-witnesses. Police central district commander Nitzav Moshe Tiomkin, who arrived at the scene about 6:30, told The Post that the police had set up road blocks. He added that he believes the four, one of whom was seriously wounded would soon be caught.

Jerusalem Post Staff Prime Minister Menahem Begin yesterday presented a revamped autonomy blueprint to the 11-man ministerial committee on autonomy, which sources said was not fundamentally different from his original 26-point proposal drafted in These points have been emphasized by Premier Begin in recent public statements. They were expressed or implied in the 26-point plan, and in Israel's reading of the Camp David "Framework for Peace." The premier intends to publish the latest blueprint once it has been endorsed by the full cabinet and before the autonomy negotiations with Egypt

But even before the formal publication, the plan has already triggered hostile reactions, both from Egypt and from the Israel Labour Party.

In Cairo, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said Begin's proposals were a "precondition" which could jeopardize the negotiations, due to open at El-Arish at the end of this month. The spokesman also contested Begin's conception regarding the Golan Heights, noting that "security should not be attained by usurping the lands of others."

Repeating Egypt's view, the spokesman claimed that Israel's agreement to pull out of Sinai under the peace treaty with Egypt was a precedent "that is applicable to other occupied Arab territories."

"The principles contained in the treaty are the agreed basis for negotiations regarding all other fronts," the spokesman said. ## Rabin slams death penalty decision

By DAVID LANDAU

Post Diplomatic Correspondent

Former prime minister Yitzhak Rabin has attacked the cabinet's decision to bring in the death penalty for terrorists, and has strongly defended earlier decisions by his own and previous Labour-led cabinets which Premier Menahem Begin and Justice Minister Shmuel Tamir termed unconstitutional and improper.

Rabin said last Sunday's death penalty decision, coupled with the government's recent release of 76 convicted terrorists in exchange for one reserve soldier held by the Fatah, would spur the terror organizations to redouble their efforts to seize Israeli hostages.
Among the 76 released, Rabin said, were many whose "hands are stained with Jewish blood." This was the first time, he charged, that Israel had agreed to trade this sort of killer. Rabin challenged the govern-ment to publish the names of the men treed.

The cabinet decided on Sunday, by a narrow majority, to abrogate the long-standing government order to civilian and military prosecutors not to demand the death penalty. The cabinet decision referred to "acts of inhuman cruelty" committed by Begin gave as an example the re-cent attack at Nahariya, where the assailants smashed the skull of a four-year-old girl. Tamir cited the 1972 Lod Airport massacre, when Japanese killers mowed down dozens of passengers.

Begin and Tamir said the cabinet's decision meant an end to improper interference by the executive in the judicial process that had been inherent in the previous situation.

The attorney-general and the judge advocate-general, they said, were the properly competent authorities to decide, on their discretion, whether to ask the courts for the death penalty. The cabinet's decision had restored to them their discretion.

The prime minister particularly cabinet which had given a ministerial committee the right to waive the ban on the death penalty in specific cases. Begin called it "an ungodly diagrace." From telephone interviews yester-day with Rabin and with his former justice minister, Haim Zadok, it emerged that there is a basic difference of views between them and the present government as to the role of the attorney-general.

'The attorney-general, and certainly the judge advocate-general, are part of the executive branch," Zadok said categorically.

The cabinet, for its part, is entitled to guide the attorney-general both on general legal policy and in specific cases which are sensitive or involve the public interest, Zadok added. He cited the report of a committee headed by Justice Shimon Agranat in 1962 on the status of the attorney-general. Even after the new cabinet decision, said Zadok, "no attorney-general would ask a court for a death sentence without consulting first with his political superiors.'

Cabinet secretary Arye Naor, explaining the present government's view, said that the attorney-general is not a cabinet officer, as he is in the U.S. and Britain, but is part of the judicial establishment. Thus, for instance, then-attorney-general Gideon Hausner had been instructed "by his conscience" to ask for the death penalty for Eichmann. Zadok said this was nonsense:

Hausner had been instructed by the government of the day. (Hausner was not available last night.) Rabin pointed out that the original decision (in 1967) to order prosecutors not to demand the death penalty was taken by the national unity government, of which Begin was a member. "I can hardly imagine Begin participating in a government which took unconstitutional decisions," Rabin

Even after that decision, Rabin continued, the governments of the day retained for themselves the right to discuss specific cases — with a view to withdrawing the order to the prosecutors if they thought it necessary. There was one such dis-cussion after the Lod massacre in 1972, Rabin revealed. In 1974 his cabinet had passed a decision (under the impact of the Ma'alot attack) formally endorsing that situation.

The subsequent 1976 decision regarding the ministerial committee, which Begin had so vehemently attacked, had merely transferred the cabinet's right-ofreview to a standing subcommittee of ministers which dealt with "various sensitive aspects of the war against terrorism," Rabin said. It was a "perversion" to represent this as some sort of one-time, deliberate interference in the judicial process,

The 1976 decision, Rabin disclose came in the wake of Israel's successful foiling of a spectacular terror attack "in which more than a hundred persons, men, women and children, most of them Israeli, would have gone to their certain death."
Rabin refused to divulge details of what he said would have been the worst-ever terrorist action.

Both Rabin and Zadok stressed that any waiver by a cabinet of the standing order to the prosecutors and, in the event, there was no such waiver - would merely have restored to the prosecution its discretion as to whether to demand the death penalty or not. (The penalty is still on the statute book from Mandatory times.) There would have been no direct influence on the prosecution - and certainly no atampt to influence the courts, they

Flatto's French trial opens

of fraudulent business dealings, ainly in real estate, which put several large firms out of business and nearly toppled one of France's main insurance companies.

Reports submitted to the court by examining magistrates allege that Flatto and his colleagues created at least 43 phony companies whose sole purpose was to serve as cover for the fraudulent transactions. (Reuter,

Labour's reply to "this hysterical invective from the premier's bureau" was now slow in coming: Begin had fooled the people before, with his talk of a "national consensus" against returning the Rafiah settlements. It was Labour's duty to warn the people that he was fooling them again. The basics of the premier's plan were well enough known, and were rehearsed by the premier himself in his recent appearances. ## Zamir, Shin Bet will probe torture charges

By IAN BLACK and DAVID BICHARDSON

Jerusalem Post Reporters Attorney-General Yitzhak Zamir met yesterday with senior officers of the General Security Services (Shin Bet) to arrange an investigation of an East Jerusalem journalist's allegations of torture and maltreatment by at least one of their agents.

Zamir will decide next week who will conduct the investigation which was ordered following a parliamentary question tabled last week by MK Shmuel Toledano (Shai) to Justice Minister Shipuel Tamir.

The journalist, Ahmed Ismail
Ajwa, was detained last December on an administrative order signed by Defence Minister Ezer Weizman on suspicion of possessing leaflets opposing the autonomy plan. He was released in mid-April after his pregnant wife appealed to Prime Minister Menahem Begin on the advice of one of Ajwa's attorneys.

In an interview with The Jerusalem Post yesterday, the 30year-old journalist gave an account of his treatment during his 94-day detention. The interview took place at the Makassed Hospital on the Mount of Olives, where Ajwa is recovering from an appendectomy.

Ajwa said that during the first 18 days following his arrest he was held at the Russian Compound in Jerusalem where a young Shin Bet officer named "Uzi" beat him and abused him for alleged connections with the Palestine Liberation, Organization. I must insorb Later I was questioned yery cleverly by Abu Nihad la pseudonym) an iraqi of about as he spoke excellent Arabic — better than mine even," said Ajwa. "He did not use violence but tried to force me to sign an agreement to leave the country - which I refused to do."

Ajwa also alleged that he had been ottled and that he had been chained to a pipe with his arms pinned behind his back and a mask over his head for 72 hours. "The in-terrogators also told me that my wife was seeing other men in the village," he added.

Ajwa's wife, who was sitting at the foot of the hospital bed with their youngest son, said that during her husband's detention she had been followed by Shin Bet agents.

Ajwa reported his complaints to the daily "Ha'aretz" over a week ago. His story was borne out, the paper said, by an independent polygraph examination conducted by a psychologist and former head of the polygraph laboratory at National Police Headquarters. Following publication of the story there were questions tabled in the Knesset and Tamir promised a full investigation by the attorneygeneral. Two months ago, following allegations of torture published in the "Washington Post," Tamir told the Knesset that when detainees made complaints to Red Cross representatives, the complaints vere investigated by the Justice Ministry. To date, the majority of these investigations have been conducted by the state attorney, Gavriel Bach, who is currently overseas.

According to an agreement between the Defence Ministry and the International Committee of the Red Cross, representatives of the latter are allowed to see all detainees white it days of their affect have of their affect have of their meet a Red cross official for three months.

The story of Ajwa's allegations has aiready been published by a number of major foreign newspapers, in-cluding the London "Guardian" and the "New York Times."

Soviet delegation coming next week

Jerusalem Post Staff and Agencies

A high-ranking Soviet delegation is due to arrive in Israel next week to take part in celebrations marking the victory over the Nazis in World War II.

The Egyptian news agency MENA said yesterday that the delegation, which is to include Alexander Bubin, the political affairs correspondent of "Isvestia," could be the first step towards the restoration of diplomatic relations between Israel and the USSR. They said the delegation includes a "high Soviet personality" who is close to Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev.

In a report from Moscow, MENA said that "informed sources believe the visit is part of the Soviet Union's attempt to reopen a channel to Israel." The MENA report highlighted recent surprise releases of Prisoners of Zion, and said that the flow of Jewish emigrants out of the USSR had doubled since last year. But MENA also wrongly reported the delegation was coming to join the Independence Day celebrations.

According to Israel Radio, the delegation due here next week is of a higher rank than previous delegations that have attended such ceremonies here. They were invited by the Israel-Soviet Friendship Association, the radio said. The association is linked to the Rakah communist party.

Other members of the delegation include the chairman of the foreign languages department at Moscow University, Yuri Genshonov Gavriel; a member of the Soviet Committee on External Affairs, Ginadi Abdeyev; and former par-tisan fighter Leonard Bernstein, as well as Bubin.

The Council of Jewish Settlers in the West Bank and Gaza held an emergency meeting in the Gush Emunim settlement of Neve Tzuf yesterday to protest against what it described as "worrying reports of the behaviour of IDF soldiers during Arab riots." The settlers claimed that soldiers stood by and watched while students from Bir Zeit University built roadblocks to stop traffic from getting through to join Gush Emunim's Independence Day march on Tapuah.

On Wednesday night the Neve Tzuf settlers decided not to cooperate with the IDF because of what they called "the deteriorating security situation" in the West Bank. They demanded the closure of Bir Zeit and the deportation of its academic staff. A number of settlers demonstrated

Court upholds order to expel Arab student Jerusalem Post Staff

The High Court of Justice yester-day rejected an appeal by an Arab student from the West Bank to set aside a military order expelling him to Lebanon.

Riad Abu Awad, a student at Bir Zeit University, who was arrested in January on charges of indisement and activity on behalf of the PLO, said in his appeal that his actions were no worse than those of others in the West Bank and Gaza. Abu Awad said that he had not initiated the manifesto publicized by a number of Arab students in support of the PLO.

The court rejected his arguments. stating that the prosecution had proved its charges against the defendant beyond any reasonable doubt.

Tories still favoured as Britons go to polls

LONDON (Reuter). — Britons voted yesterday in a watershed general election that could give the country its first woman prime minister, Margaret Thatcher, and the most right-wing government for decades. Five opinion polls predicted that Thatcher's Conservative Party would defeat the ruling Labour Party of Prime Minister James Callaghan. They put the Conservative lead at from 2 to 8 per cent.

But the polls also showed a late surge of support for the thirdranking, middle-of-the-road Liberal Party which could affect the election outcome.

If the 53-year-old Thatcher gains a clear parliamentary majority, she has pledged to move Britain "in a wholly different direction" and turn back the tide of growing state involvement in all areas of national life.
"I am confident we shall win," she declared after voting at Chelsea town hall, West London. With Britain shivering through a freakish cold spell, some voters went to the polls in snow and hailstorms. First indications were there would be a hig turnout of the record 41.5

million electorate. In Northern Ireland, where Irish Republican guerrillas have vowed to disrupt the election, 30,000 troops and police laid down the biggest security screen in the province's history. The 584 polling stations were

Callaghan and his wife cast their votes in his Cardiff constituency. "I am confident I have two votes." he cheerfully told photographers. The Labour Party started the fiveweek campaign trailing badly. Warning that the Conservatives would bring change and chaos, it appeared to have made up ground — largely thanks to the tireless work of Callaghan himself, now 67.

Opinion polls put his personal popularity far higher than Thatcher's. The Gallup survey yesterday reported 44 per cent of those questioned considered Callaghan a better prime minister and only 25 per cent preferred Thatcher.

But all the polls had the Conser vatives ahead. The last to be published, in the London "Evening Standard," estimated Conservative support at 45 per cent, Labour 37, Liberals 15 and other minority groups 3 per cent. This would give the Tories a majority of more than 40 seats in the 635-member House of Commons and a solid powerbase to enact their right-wing programme.

The polls sent shares soaring, with well over £1,000m. being added to London stock market prices. The pound also improved, rising almost a cent to $2.077.

Bookmakers reported a flood of bets on a Conservative victory. One punter gambled £42,000 on Thatcher securing an overall majority.

Japan pledges aid, Viets rap China at Asian bank meet

MANILA (AP). - China came under attack from Vietnam on the second day of the Asian Development Bank's annual board of governors meeting here yesterday as Japan pledged $1b. in grants to the poorest among Asia's developing countries.

The Japanese offer was announced by Finance Minister Ippei Kaneko, who said the money is aimed at helping to alleviate the heavy debt burdens many Asian developing countries face.

Other countries outside the region are also to receive similar "untied aid" but in a much lower scale, which Kaneko did not reveal.

"This work is outstanding among the numerous books about Israel...... it reveals with remarkable impact the depth and breadth of the spiritual substance of Judaism, its influence on the section of humanity known as the Christian Western World, and thus on all the people of the earth," Max Tau.

Angola to return South African pilots' bodies

GENEVA (UPI). - Angola yesterday offered to return the remains of 12 South African airmen shot down in raids over Angolan territory on March 13 and 14.

The International Red Cross said that the South African government had accepted the offer, made through the IRC. Arsian Haraci, a special envoy of the Angolan government, told a news conference in Geneva that six aircraft were involved in the raids and shot down by Angolan air defence units. He said the planes shot down were three Mirage-III and three Canberra bombers.

Bernstein cancels concerts in Mexico

GUANAJUATO, Mexico (AP). -American conductor Leonard Bernstein, stricken with amoebic dysentery, on Wednesday cancelled his performances this week with the Mexico City Symphony at the 7th International Cervantes Festival.

French Maestro Antonio de Almeida replaced Bernstein at the performances on Tuesday and Wednesday in this small colonial village 350 km. northwest of Mexico City. "De Almeida was great," said one concertgoer. "But Bernstein, well he's so dramatic and emotional when he conducts — I'm sorry he couldn't come."

North Korea offers new ideas for peace

PYONGYANG, North Korea (AP). - Promising that he would not attack the South, North Korea's president Kim Il Sung yesterday met with UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim and offered new initiatives that the UN official said might break the deadlock in talks between the two Koreas.

"My impression is that there are some openings, some possibilities," Waldheim told reporters after meeting with the 67-year-old North Korean leader at his palace in Pyongyang and lunching with him afterward

Waldheim declined to be specific, but UN sources said Kim indicated "a certain flexibility" in his longstanding position that there was no role for South Korea in negotiations to replace the armistice that ended the Korean War.

The North has said that only the U.S. should be involved in such discussions because it is the main component of the UN peace keeping their last respects yesterday to Morteza Motaheri, Ayatollah Khomeini's religious aide who was assassinated on Tuesday.

Anti-communist protest marks Motaheri funeral

He was given a hero's burial in the holy city of Qom, amid scenes which witnesses said were unprecedented in Iran's recent history

Mourners' rallies in Qom, Teheran and provincial cities turned into a huge anti-Communist demonstration, although responsibility for the murder of the 60-year-old Motsheri has been claimed by an ultrarightwing organization. There was speculation that the protests beraided an expected crackdown on the Communists, or at least increased pressure on their unrestricted operation since the downfall of Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi in February.

Prime Minister Mehdi Bazargan led the funeral rites, which began at Teheran University mosque, along with aides listed by the self-proclaimed killers of Motaheri as luture targets. The gathering at Teheran was charged with tension. Men and black-veiled women, many weeping or wailing, shouted "I shall kill anyone who kills my brother." Thousands of marchers joined the funeral procession as it headed for Qom, the scene of more emotional demonstrations. Witnesses said huned with the body to the southern edge of Teheran where it was taken to Motaheri was a disciple of Khomeini who graduated from his religious school in Qom before the shah exiled Khomeini 15 years ago. The Forgan group which claimed responsibility for his assassination named him as head of the powerful secret Revolutionary Council, the most influential body created since the revolution.

Although Forgan, which derives its name from a Koranic chapter on the "distinction between truth and falsehood," is known to comprise former mullahs disputing the clergy's predominance in Islam, demonstrators yesterday directed their fury at the pro-Soviet Tudeh Communist Party, the main leftist guerrilla group of Fedayeen e-Khalq, and "counter-Khalq, revolutionaries."

Motaheri's assassination was only the second political murder since the revolution. Khomeini's former chief of staff, Maj.-Gen. Mohammed Vali Qarani, was gunned down in his central Teheran home 12 days ago, and Forçan claimed responsibility for that killing. Leaflets distributed in Teheran University this week said "all 50 top clergy leaders of Iran" were on a Forgan assassination list.

U.S. inflation Oil prices fuel Wholesale prices are eventually price index in April stood at 211.2 per cent of the 1967 average of 100.

The increase in prices for goods other than food showed that the nation will continue to have serious problems with inflation even after the upward spiral in food prices eases. However, administration officials expect inflation will begin to ease at all levels by summer and continue to improve during the rest of the year.

U.S. officials said the switch of position was aimed mainly at denying ammunition to domestic opponents of the SALT agreement. There was concern, the officials said, that critics might charge Carter later with negotiating a bad agreement under the pressures of a summit.

There also was speculation that the change was due partly to Brezhnev's reportedly bad health and a desire to spare him from too much bargaining at the summit. But, when State Department spokesman Hodding Carter was asked if Brezhnev's health was a factor, he said, "No." The Carter administration has accepted the Soviet contention that the medium-range Backfire is not a strategic weapon and therefore should not be specifically limited by the SALT II treaty, which will im-pose ceilings on U.S. and Soviet strategic nuclear weapons through

Moerken clocks excellent time in 100m. Hapoel swim records fall on opening day

By PAUL KOHN

Post Sports Reporter TEL AVIV. - World record-holder Gerald Moerken of West Germany yesterday swam his third fastest time ever in the 100m. breaststroke, in the opening swim of the 11th International Hapoel Games at the Tel Aviv University pool.

The 19-year-old Dortmund swimmer timed one minute, 3.39 seconds, less than one second off his world mark of 1:02.86 min. Moerken's World Champi ning time in Berlin last August read one minute, 8.62 seconds.

"I am surprised that I returned this very good time today. It would have been even better had I had another couple of days to acclimatize to conditions in Israel. Also, the water in the pool is cooler than I like it." a delighted Moerken said.

Some 3,000 swim fans saw the world champion easily beat his fellow countryman Peter Lang, who timed 1:07.19, with England's Leigh Atkinson third in 1:08.6.

The first afternoon's swimming was of the highest standard yet seen in Israel, and every previous Hapoel Games record was broken.

Ron Kehrmann, 20, of Haifa broke his own Israel record in the 200-metre medley. He timed two minutes, 11.83 seconds, beating his record of 2;14.52. Kehrmann finished the race in second place behind Jamie Fowler of the U.S., who timed 2:10.64 and beat another American, Glynn Perry, into third place.
"The race was extremely competitive, and I am in fine condition after training in Dortmund together with Gerald Moerken." Kehrmann said, explaining his record-breaking

One of the world's most promising swimmers, Cynthia Woodhead, of the U.S., won the 400-metre freestyle in 14 minutes. 14.21 seconds, by an eight-metre margin from her teammate, 16-year-old Linda Thompson, and the Australian Karen van de Grasf. Cynthia was second in this race in the Berlin world championships, with a time of 4:06.7. An American, 17-year-old Jill Sterkl, also won-the 100-metre backstroke by beating Sweden's Tina Gustaffson and Nancy Hogshead of the U.S. Sterkel's winning time was 1:06.6.

The most exciting race was the 200 metres breaststroke in which Eva Maria: Harkansson, 18, pipped Britain's Margaret Kelly with the last stroke of the swim. With only 50 metres to go, the 22-year-old Liverpool swimmer led by five metres and looked a certain winner. The Swede produced a tremendous finish to touch before the English girl. Rene Laravie of the U.S. was third.

The fastest swimmer in the world, David McCagg of the U.S., emerges from the Tel Aviv University pool yesterday.

Harkansson's time was 2:41.76. World champion in the 100-metre freestyle, David McCagg, swam the fastest 100 metres ever recorded in this country, clocking 52.02 seconds. This event was a clean sweep for the Americana as Rowdy Gaines took so. cond place in 52.25 seconds with David Larson third in 52.72, Australia's Mark Tonelli was fourth in 53 seconds flat, ahead of the Swedish pair Per Alvar Magnusson and Per Ola Quist. Israel's Nir Shamir reached the final, but finished eighth, and failed to break the McCagg said he would have bettered his time, but had a stomach upset. "Your food here is too spicy for my taste buds," the world champion said. His view was supported by several top American swimmers.

The American sweep was checked unexpectedly by the Swedes. Thomas Lejdstroen, 17, won the 1,500 metres in 16 minutes 27.17 seconds, after a duel with David Larson of the U.S., who timed 16:27.72

The Swedes also won the men's 40 x 100 metres medley, beating the Americans into second place, with Germany third and England fourth. At the end of the first day's swimming, Americans had won five gold medals, Sweden three and Germany one gold medal. The events resume

West German cyclists still dominate Hapoel 6-day race

By JACK LEON

Post Sports Reporter TEL AVIV. — West Germany's Michael Marx yesterday took over the yellow jersey from his compatriot Helmut Schlund at the end of the second leg of the Hapoel Games six-day bicycle race, from Kibbutz Dan in Upper Galilee to Beersheba.

Marx won first place in the overall standings by virtue of being first past the post in the second stage from Tiberias to Upper Nazareth, covering the 94 km, in 2:05.20 hours. He had finished fifth in Wednesday's opening stage from Dan to Tiberias, which was won by Schlund. Second to Marx yesterday was Luxembourg's Claude Michely in 2.06.54, but the second stage — which was blessed by pleasant weather —

Former Prisoners of Zion who were released this week talk to The Post's SALL'H HONIG about life in prison — and arrival in Israel

'What more can a man want?

"TEN YEARS of imprisonment were not too high a price for our land," Wolf Zalmanson said solemnly at Ben-Gurion Airport last Monday. "Even 15 years is not too much for the privilege of coming to Israel," he added, half-humorously.

Wolf, who now prefers to be called Ze'ev, stood at the podium next to the Prime Minister to greet two newcomers: his brother-in-law Eduard Kurnetzov and pilot Mark Dymshitz. A round of applause erupted from the crowd, when the gaunt, gently smiling man with the shaven head and the tear-filled eyes greated the two released prisoners. Zalmanzon offered the traditional bruchim haba'im and announced that he was speaking "as a veteran Israeli receiving new olim," After all, he had come to Israel before them - a full 16 hours before.

Change had been so swift and so sudden for Zalmanson in the past fortnight that his role as an old-time Israeli after less than a day in the country was in keeping with the pace of recent events in his life.

"I started my working day as usual on Saturday, April 14," he told me, "but then was suddenly ordered to pack my gear because I was being moved, without any idea of why or where and what it was all about Before I was asked to pack up once more, I found myself spending three days in a Perm jail and then I was in an airplane — in chains — being flown to my native city of Riga.

was now clear to me that something was afoot. The warden at the Riga jail remarked on how much I resembled my father, which was unusual, and then he leams know unofficially that sewer to fill out an application permit to go to Israel, because this time Presily would be going.

"An hour laterage had it in writing

— an order directly from Breakney that I was to be freed. In one more hour I was at my father's flat and on April 19 I had my exit visa — no red tape this time. "He surfied shyly.

"CHANGE was so speedy that it left me a bit confissed," he confessed. "But I am happier new than I can ever express. What more can a man want than a himmeland, family and triends? Now there them all."

It did not take him long to adjust to freedom though. Decause in spirit I was never a shore. But what will take time will he daily adjusttake time will see the daily adjust-ment to the energy pourine of a free man." he explained.
"After nine yours Lam attuned to all that is connected with the life and routine of a prisoner II is all so deep-ly lograined in me, but I am out of ch with all that pertains to normal life." Zalmanson recalled how strange it was even to turn on the water faucet in his father's flat wind what a

"I could not steep at first. I could not look for anything the father's kitchen. I couldn't flassfood for myself. I behaved like a baby. I couldn't cope with any task that was different from my camp noutine."
But he was quick to add that all he

Wolf had already incurred the authorities' wrath when as a teenager he and his friends built a monument to the 38,000 Jews slain by the Nazis in the Romboli woods outside Riga. They tended the mass

graves, clearing and cleaning up their surroundings. His father then received a stern letter of warning from the KGB, advising him that his sons "have become entangled in sticky spider webs. You had better rescue them before time runs out." But Wolf continued going to Romboll every Sunday. His friends gathered there near the graves, where they recifed Hebrew poems, sang Jewish songs and dreamt of Izraei.

Wolf told his story in a surprisingly fluent Hebrew. It was acquired at an ulpan, "but not the usual one like you have in Israel. Our ulpan was established in a forced labour camp and my Hebrew comes entirely from there. Before my imprisonment I knew no more than the Hebrew alphabet. Then someone smuggled the Hebrew text "1,000 Words" into camp. A month later more Jewish prisoners from Leningrad arrived and we decided to open an ulpan. It wasn't easy.

"We were worked hard on too few calories a day. We turned to our studies after a day of slavery. The wardens knew about us and did all they could to disrupt our clandestine school. When we got caught, classes were recessed because the students were sent on holiday in solitary confinement." he recalls with a slight laugh.

The wardens finally caught up with the book and confiscated it. But they did not know that the Jewish prisoners had spent long night hours diligently copying the text, just in case. Some time later, their school library expanded as someone smuggled even more books in. The forced labour camp ulpan was run strictly and students even had to sit for final exams. "Wolf was considered an outstanding student," his younger brother Yisrael volunteered. "I was average. Although I came to Israel in August, he speaks better Hebrew than I do."

ABOUT A YEAR later. Wolf and his teacher Yosef Mendelevich, who is still behind bars, were moved to another labour camp in the Urals. They managed to take some books with them and set up another ulpan for Jewish prisoners.

"For a long time the wardens in the new camp did not even suspect us. Our ulpan expanded and we had two classes. Yosef gave the more advanced course and I taught beginners," Wolf recalled with a note of triumph in his voice. They heard that it was advantageous for Israelis to have a good command of English, "and since we were determined to get to our country sooner or later, we diversified and started learning English too. We would converse in either Hebrew or English - for the practice," Wolf ex-

But Mendelevich finally got caught. His efforts to teach Hebrew cost him dearly and he was transferred to the notorious Vladimir Prison.

For the past two of his nine years at hard labour, Zalmanson was left without anyone with whom he could speak Hebrew or English. "I hope I haven't forgotten too much. I couldn't practise," he said almost apologetically.

He now plans to continue the struggle for Soviet Jewry, "but at the same time I want to become an ordinary citizen. A man must not run from a fight, but a country also needs ordinary citizens. I'll do all I can for those left behind in Russia for the prisoners and friends and for aliya - not only from the USSR but from the rest of the world too. I'll do all that is in my power.

"Though I'm just a plain person and not a statesman. I feel that there must be no let-up in the struggle for Soviet Jewry. This is no time to lower the tone and repay the Kremlin for letting us go. We were freed precisely because the struggle was too loud for Soviet comfort. If that method of fighting was successful, it must not be abandoned or replaced.'

It's a dream come true...'

ONE OF THE FIRST things Mark Dymshitz had to do on his first day in Israel was 'to correct the mistakes of the KGB. They clearly did not realize just how warm a welcome I would get in this country," he said. Israel certainly received him and the six other Prisoners of Zion who arrived here this week with warmth of emotion. And when Dymahitz and his friend Eduard Kuznetzov walked out of the El Al jumbo which had brought them from New York; they instantly found themselves in the heated embrace of a shereon and exhausting emotional upheavals of the made in Poland soil in which the KGB had olothed Dymahitz to devote the coming months to the before sending him, Kuspetsov and three other dissidents to New York in exchange for two convicted Soviet spies, "'was certainly a KGB blunder." Dymshitz said. As soon as he left the air-conditioned airport, off came the heavy jacket.

Bulgaria shoes would have to be removed, too. So the first place his wife Allevitina and daughters Lisa and Julia took him was a shoe store, which he left wearing Israeli sandals.

Next Dymahitz anade his way to Lisa's Azur apartment to see his month-old first-born grandson, fittingly named Ylarael, since he also happens to be the first Sabra in the family. When Dymahitz received the news of his birth, he was still an in-mate in a Soviet hard-labour camp, facing six years of imprisonment and mainutrition. Until he landed in Israel, he did not even know the baby's name.

"It's a dream come true to have a sabra grandson." he said in the small Baf Yam apartment in which his wife Allevitina has been living since her aliya in 1977.

When we met him, the sun had stready set, but he was hot and tired after the long flight and a non-stop schedule. He was sitting nervously on the edge of a bed in the tiny living room. He was in his stockinged feet, eating ice cream and trying to relax: and adjust himself to the sudden transformations wrought by fate.

SECONDS after his wife and daughter went into the kitchen to fetch a tray of truit, the siren marking the beginning of Memorial Day sounded and the man who had been in Israel for less than 10 hours got up, walked to the window and stood at attention in memory of Israel's fallen, gazing silently at the street of the immigrant neighbourhood six flights below him.

Resuming his seat on the bed, he confessed to being overwhelmed and unable to express his feelings.

"After nine years in Soviet captivity. I am, needless to say, overjoyed to bein the homeland I had been dreaming about. Everything here looks like some seaside resort and people appear to be so free. I think my hap-piness is written on my face. I feel like one who has been matched from the Soviet claws."

BUT THE EL AL pilots who flew him from New York to Israel regarded him as a fellow aviator. The captain invited Dymshitz into the cockpfi and a Russian-speaking member of the crew explained the instrumentation. "I took great interest in all that I saw there — professional interest of course," he said matter-of-factly, sipping a Coca Cola. "The crew was so nice to me. I felt that the plane was already Israeli territory and I was in my country at last. I made my way from New York to Israel as a free man. This was in stark contrast to the way I got to New York."

His trip to America started without any advance preparations, and with no idea of what the final destination would be. But the ourney was not entirely unexpected.

"I had intuitions of an impending change. It began on April 24 when the camp commandant summoned me and handed me two telegrams. They were sent by Wolf Zalmanson, Arye Khaokh, Hillel Butman, Boris Penson and Anatoly Altman. They let me know that they had been released from their camps and were going to Israel. It was then that my intuition started working. Something told me that if their sentences were cut, maybe I would get out early, release - "Not with champagne butwith tea. With each passing hour my feeling that freedom is not too far off, and that Israel is not so distant a target, increased. Only a few hours later a warden came and told me to pack up my things because I was being moved.'

Before he left the camp, wardens went through his meagre belongings, taking out his diarles, letters, photographs and papers. These, he was told, would be returned to him after they had been examined.

Thus, minus his journals, he was put in a black prison van and driven for over two hours to the train station and from there he was taken to the city of Perm. The next leg of the journey was by plane to Moscow. "I was chained and guarded by at least 20 men during the flight. I decided to inquire why the need for handcuffs, and was answered curtly that it's standard procedure. I then asked if they really feared I would jump out of the plane without the cuffs, but I don't think they enjoyed my joke. This was a regular passenger plane in which a whole section had been vacated just for me. Apart from myself and the guards, no one was llowed in that area."

AFTER A DAY in a Moscow jail, Dynahitz was taken to the office of the chief warden, where two government officials confronted him with the declaration that he was being stripped of his Soviet citizenship. An order from the Supreme Soviet had arrived, he was informed, whereby he was to be released and given two hours to leave the country When Dymshitz asked about his notes and diaries, he was told that they would not be returned to him.

He was then removed to the next room and given the Polish suit and Bulgarian shoes. "I could hear the same procedure going on in the adjoining room, though I didn't know who the other prisoner might be or what the whole thing was about. The warden rushed me and I could not find out anything. Outside was a long convoy of some dozen Volga cars and under heavy guard I was driven to the airport. I glanced at the streets of Moscow and wondered where I was being taken. My guess was that I was being deported to Vienna, from whence I would procede to Israel. "It was somewhat of a shock to be told by two American diplomats aboard the Aerofiot Ilyushin jet that.

I was being taken to New York.

He was told that a position size Leningrad would be his if he fire agreed to do a year and a half state as a pilot in Uzbekhistan. Whence completed this term of civilian flying in the provinces, he again put request for a job in Leningrad. " time I was told that I would have bego to Uzbekhistan for another war and a half and then maybe I would get a tob in Lemingrad. get a job in Leningrad.

"I was dismayed and baffled. Maybe at first there really were to openings in Leningrad. But this this around I knew there was work there: Then a friend soon explained the real resson to me. He revealed the exsiznce of a secret instruction, put in effect in the early 1960s, not to employ Jews in certain positions. This was the first time I had met blatant anti-Semitism. I had to confiont it and not run away from it. This personal experience stirred the Jew in me and aroused a desire to express my identity as a Jew."

Meanwhile, effectively barred from continuing his flying career, Dynahitz entered the Agricultural Institute in Leningrad and graduated with a degree in electronic engineering. He grew more and more disenchanted with the state of Jews in the Soviet Union.

"I began to sense the discriming tion against Jews more and more. I started to realize how supressed the Yiddish language was. I noticed the lack of books on anything Jewish. the absence even of a Jewish theatre, to say nothing of the taboo on Jewish schools and education," Dymahitz, son family. His new friends were my Jewish consciousness growing, I was taking interest in Mid-East events. I did not fully grasp the balance of power in the region, but

"But at the very time in which the Egyptian dictator was loudly declaring his aim of destroying Israel, here Mas my country, the Soviet Union, supporting and arming this would be exterminator.

"This shook me. I was powerless to decry this one-sided Soviet stand from within. And then the thought same to me that if I cannot oppose Soviet policy towards Israel from the inside, I had better leave and go to where I could say what was in my beart, to Israel."

LEAVING Russia was no easy matter, especially because Dymshitz's air force career ruled out any chance of his ever being able to secure an exit visa. "But the idea of leaving Russia started to gnaw and nag me, and being a pilot, everything I thought of nehow involved airborne escape. I began to toy with all sorts of crazy 'notions," he smiles, "I even con-Midered putting together a home-made hot air balloon to fly out of Russia. Then I thought that I would be able to plan and construct some sort of a small crude plane. I turned he and other notions in my mind, but after serious consideration, it was clear that they weren't really practical."

He then thought that it might be possible to gain control of an empty Soviet plane, fly it to Sweden and from there continue to Israel. The great drawback of this idea was that he would need the cooperation of others and he did not know where he would find other Soviet citizens willing to join him in so risky a venture.

But he soon found them in an underground ulpan which he started attending in 1969. There he met other Jews who had been denied exit visas. Among them were flery activists from Riga and the Zionist Zalmanpulte open to the idea of stealing a Dymshitz and his friends never even reached the aircraft, but were arrested on the night of June 15, 1970 near an airfield in the vicinity of Leningrad.

The leaders of the conspiracy, Dymshitz and Kuznetzov, were sentenced to death. The outcry of public opinion in the West caused the Soviets to reconsider and the next barshest sentence in the Soviet Union was imposed on the two — 15 years at hard labour. The other members of the group were also sentenced to long terms. The Communist Party expelled Dymshitz from its ranks. During the trial, Dymshitz told his judges that he had met some of the conspirators for the first time at the sirport, shortly before their arrest, "but I thank them all. We could not be turned into spiders in a jar and they could not force us to shift blame on one another. I myself might not even have reached this court-room had I been allowed to work in my profession. But once I decided to leave the Soviet Union, no power in the world - not even that of the dreaded KGB — could stop me from carrying out my aims."

In the final analysis, the dreaded KGB did not stop Dymshitz — it only delayed him for nine long, tortuous years. "But now I am here after all," he says, not without a touch of wonderment in his voice. "But the work is not yet done," he quickly adds. "We must not feel that by having let us go, the Soviet Union has now changed, cleansed itself and become the good guy. Too many Jews are still told they cannot leave and too many are still prisoners of Three of the Leningrad defendants are still behind electrified barbed wire. Two are non-Jews, Alexel Murzhenko and Yuri Fiodorov, and the sole Jewish member of the group still unfreed is Yosef Mendelevich. He has become deeply observant and Dymshitz cannot account for the fact that he was for some reason set apart and not released.

"I cannot tell you what the Soviet criteria are or if there are any. Soviet reasoning is at times too mysterious for logic. Maybe this is some arbitrary decision, maybe it isn't and maybe it would change...I don't know." he confessed.

CHINA was not as taken aback as the rest of the pro-Arab world when President Sadat visited Jerusalem in November, 1977, because Peking had been calling for direct negotiations between Israel and the Arabs since

Such negotiations were viewed by Peking as the best way to minimize superpower influence in the area, explains Dr. Yitzhak Shichor, executive director of the Hebrew University's Harry S. Truman Research Institute.

Peking interprets Soviet intentions in the Middle East as a two-pronged threat to China, Shichor asserts.

Peking believes that tactically, Moscow is striving for hegemony in the Persian Gulf and the Indian Ocean to tighten the noose of Russian encirclement of China. But the strategic role of the Middle East is even more crucial to Peking, which believes that Soviet advances in this region threaten the global balance of power, Shichor says.

China, he adds, is convinced that, despite 44 divisions of crack Russian troops stationed on the Sino-Soviet border, Moscow is largely preoccupied with the military challenge of Western Europe, a contention which is seemingly borne out by the magnitude of Warsaw Pact forces which face NATO troops in Europe. By MICHAEL FIELDMAN/Jerusalem Post Staff

Peking's view of the peace pact

THE MIDDLE EAST is of such vital interest to China because, "It is the key by which Moscow can pacify Europe through control of its oil sources," and Peking is convinced, according to Shichor, that if Western Europe were neutralized, Russia would be free to move against China.

It is clear then, that despite maintaining a consistent line of support for the Arab cause, Peking's real interest in the Middle East is defined within the context of the global struggle against the Soviet Union, he

This perception translates into a reflexive Chinese Mid-east policy of countering Russia — which means good relations between China and those Arab states which are pro-Western, and only lukewarm relations with the more radical Arab states, which are pro-Soviet.

Perhaps the best example of China's Middle East pragmatism with an anti-Soviet bent was Peking's close relationship with the Shah of Iran. Until the Khomeini revolution, China maintained very strong political, commercial and military ties with Iran, Shichor

Though the alignment and loyalties of the Arab states are now somewhat blurred due to the upheaval which has been caused by Egypt's treaty with Israel, Shichor is convinced that a clear Weastern-Soviet polarity will return to the

The biggest question mark in the region for Peking during this period is Saudi Arabia, says Shichor. It is the most important Arab state that still maintains full diplomatic relations with Taiwan. The Saudis are thought to be fundamentally anti-Soviet, but the Americansponsored peace treaty between Israel and Egypt has strained relations between Riyadh and Washington. A Saudi rebuff to a possible Russian feeler can no longer be taken for granted.

PEKING'S relations with pro-Soviet Syria, Iraq, South Yemen, Libya and Algeria — all countries which are vehemently opposed to the Israel-Egypt peace treaty — are unambiguously strained, he says.

China, at one time the champion of national liberation movements, now also maintains only correct relations with the PLO. Peking established ties with the PLO in 1964, but Shichor believes that even then China was striving mainly to generate the goodwill of the Arab states by welcoming a PLO legation in Pek-

Today the PLO maintains a quasidiplomatic mission in Peking, but "China only pays them lip-service," ties were not established between Peking and Jerusalem in the early 1950s, despite China having made overtures to Israel at that time. Peking has criticized the PLO for Peking later proclaimed it would allowing what power they had to disintegrate as the result of bickering have no contact with Israel until a solution was found for the Israel-Arab dispute, including the Palestinian problem. But Peking never specified what the nature of that solution must be.

A newly pragmatic China would reason that, "If the solution is good enough for Cairo, it's good enough for us," thereby actively casting its lot with the emerging American/Egyptian/Israeli axis in the Middle East. Or it may just 'wait and see.''

BUT THERE is another possibility.
The Chinese have kept a close watch on Israel for many years. According to Shichor, Mao Tse-tung's peasant forces were receiving information on Palestine in the 1940a, when they were holed-up in the caves of Yenan. In the 1950s, articles about Mapai and Israeli political life were appearing in China, and today, Chinese journals publish articles about settlements in Judea and Samaria, complete with pictures of JNF tractors and bulldozers. Of. ficially, Peking has used this familiarity in condemning Israel, point by point, for the last 25 years. But the Chinese awareness of Israel also manifests itself in another, unexpected way. Shicker reveals that recent visitors to China are bringing back news of an interesting phenomenon - on a gram roots level, there exists an "Israell mystique" in China, something which was observed in Eastern Europe in the early 1970s. When removed from the context of the Middle East conflict, Israel is admired by the Chinese as a strong nation of brave, gritty people.

Peking could conclude that there are still many political problems. such as continued Israeli presence in the territories, which preclude China recognizing the Israeli government, But the peace-loving israeli people is another matter.

Shichor believes, therefore, that people-to-people diplomacy is a likely step in Chinese-Iaraeli relations in the not-too-distant future.

'HOLY BOOM' HITS PAKISTAN ADS

By SYED YUSUF RAZA/Karachi

THE CURRENT Islamization drive of Pakistan's puritanical Zia regime has launced something of a "holy boom" in the country's advertising and film industries.

Advertisements in the Pakistani press are now unrecognizable from what they were two years ago, while the country's previously ailing film industry has been virtually reincar-nated with the announcement of big expansion plans.

The continued success of both industries, however, depends on one thing — that all their products carry a suitably "pure" and Islamic essage, though even this may not be enough for the more hard-line

The most dramatic manifestations of the "new" Pakistan have been in newspaper advertisements. There has been a sudden disappearance of women from photographs — to the sorrow of girl models — with a sudden preponderance of quotations from the Koran — to the consternation of the priests, who consider it

Most of the advertisements begin with the words: "In the name of Allah, the merciful and beneficent..." and then go on to link the Islamic faith with their product. The ways they do so are highly ingenique. An advertisement for the Habib Bank, for example, reads: "Islam's message is the message of God. Let us popularize the message of Islam all over the world... Let Habib Bank serve you better.

MANY PEOPLE laugh at this advertisement, but priests condemn it as 'Satan reading scriptures and delivering sermons." Banks based on an un-Islamic system of interest, they assert, cannot popularize Islam. Nevertheless, the advertisements continue. The Mineral Development Corporation says: "The mineral wealth is one of the blessings of the Almighty Allah. And we are here to

The Fauji Fertilizer Company in its advertisement cites a Kornic verse: "A grain that grows seven ears and every ear a hundred grains" and then claims "Fauji Fertilizer is dedicated to this cause."

Other Islamic "spin-offs" include an ingenious publicity programme introduced by the sole distributors of Russian TV sets in Pakistan. They sponsored a TV quiz programme "Roshni" (Light), based on the life of Mohammed, and aimed at college and university students. They awarded scholarships, Russian TV sets and books on the life of the Holy Prophet to winners.

During the month of Ramadan (the month of fasting), an enterprising firm by the name of Emex Cream Manufacturers claimed use of their product did not constitute breaking of the fast but on the contrary "earned the pleasure of God and made the skin fairer."

A construction company, Imam and Imam Ltd., which is constructing a commercial plaza on the site of a closed cinema, offered tickets for."Umera" (a visit to Mecca) to 10 lucky buyers of shops in the com-

(World Features)

SEEN FROM the air, the landscape of the major oil producing countries of the Middle East will look very different in the year 2000. Many of the derricks and silver storage tanks will have disappeared, their oil fields having been exhausted.

But in their place will be giant towers, surrounded by acres of parabolic mirrors, ceaselessly tracking the sun in its fiery path across the sky. Electric power stations will have replaced the oil refineries and high-voltage transmission towers the pipelines. Energy will remain the major export of the Middle East countries. It will still be the sun's energy but harnessed by means of technologies still in their infancy. This vision of the world's great deserts transformed into giant solar furnaces was evoked briefly by a scientist before an audience of some 300 scientists and engineers, many of them from the Third World. They were attending the first international conference on solar energy for development, organized by the Commission of the European Communities in Varese, Italy. Its aim: to see how far solar energy can help meet the energy requirements of the developing countries.

THE SUN'S energy is being used increasingly to pump water for irriga-tion, to turn brackish water into drinking water, to generate electricity, to dry rice as well as cook it, to produce ice so that food and medicines can be stored for longer periods, to run radio and television sets and to heat homes as well as to cool them. For a number of reasons solar energy holds out greater promise for the poorer countries, especially their rural populations. Even so, both the U.S. and the EEC are beginning to take if seriously. As the participants to the solar energy conference could see for themselves, the Joint Research Centre of the European Communities for nuclear energy at Ispra, Italy, is now conducting research into solar energy also. Much of the work of the conference was done in technical review meetings, during which the experts reviewed current developments in solar technology and indicated the most promising areas for further research and development.

The shape of things to come

Solar energy technologies range from the very simple to the extreme-ly complex; they include both the wood stove and the photogoltaic cell, which was developed by the Americans to power the instruments on their space satellites.

These cells, which directly transform sunlight into electrical energy, could make it possible for even the remotest village in the tropics to tap the sun for all its energy requirements. The conference in fact called for more field testing of photovoltaic systems to determine their reliability under different climatic conditions.

But it did not confine its recommendations to the more advanced solar technologies. The conference noted that some techniques had been used through the ages and them more effective.

THIS WAS particularly true of perts term "biomass." This is thing more then organic matter which can be used as fuel. It' therefore includes not only wood and sugarcane but also a wide range of agricultural wastes, such as bagasse, coffee husks, groundnut shells and even cowdung.

Several speakers from the Third World stressed the importance of blogas plants, in which organic lighting, or transformed into mechanical and electrical power by means of the ordinary automobile engine. The conference also drew up some guidelines for regional and international co-operation, which was felt to be highly desirable if developing countries are not to find themselves in the passive role of consumers of advanced technologies which have been developed almost entirely in

It was generally agreed that co-operation should be on the basis of equality and should include not only the joint design of projects but also the joint manufacture of the finished product. Local manufacture would create employment in developing countries and result in equipment which could be more easily maintained and repaired by local

THE EUROPEAN participants. several of whom represented private firms, accepted that. But a willingness to co-operate is not enough in itself. Its benefits must be evident to both sides.

The benefits to developing countries include access to more advanced technology, an opportunity to collaborate with Western firms in the local manufacture of at least part of the more modern solar energy devices and the promise of

But the EEC would also benefit from co-operation with developing countries. The latter obviously are more suitable for field testing. And of course they represent a much bigger market than the Community.

Most Common Market countries enjoy only limited amounts of sunskine; on the other hand, the tall have a well-developed infrastructure for conventional forms of energy.

Given the high cost of developing solar pumps, for example, to the point where they can be mass produced, there is a danger that many developing countries may end up simply as consumers of technologies developed by Common

BEFORE the Six-Day War of 1967, the Araba pursued the single-minded goal of destroying Israel by conventional means; that is, through conventional warfare supplemented by terrorist attacks and economic

Inasmuch as Israel was a democratic state, and one whose establishment was sanctioned by the United Nations, it was felt among the Arabs that they could hardly count on the democratic West to help them terminate Israel's existence.

Accordingly, the language of Arab propaganda was unrestrained; it openly called for largel's annihilation. This was consistent with the Islamic tradition of Jihad.

Nasser of Egypt let Israel know that "the road to the liberation of Palestine is strewn not with roses but with blood." Assad of Syria hurled this threat against the Jewish State: "We shall never call for, or accept, peace. We shall only accept war and the restoration of our usurped land. We have resolved to drench this land with our blood, to oust you aggressors and throw you into the sea for good."

Meanwhile, King Hussein of Jor-dan urged Arabs to "kill Jews wherever you find them, kill them with your hands, with your nails and

This rabid hatred vented against Israel by its bellicose Islamic neighbours was hardly diminished by the defeat and disgrace of the Arab world in the Six Day War. But such was the profundity of that defeat and disgrace that various Arab leaders came to the conclusion that the elimination of Israel from the Middle East required a new strategy or set of tactis.

Israel, it was realized, could not be destroyed solely by means of war not as long as America favoured the Israelis with sophisticated military hardware and logistical support, Which means that certain Arab leaders gave up the idea of liquidating Israel in one quick blow.

THE NEW ARAB STRATEGY

Having realized that Israel cannot be destroyed by war, the Arabs have embarked on a new strategy to bring down the Jewish state, writes PAUL EIDELBERG in the first of two articles.

For this purpose, Egypt, the most advanced and most powerful Arab of November 22, 1967. state, would have to pose as a "moderate."

Resolution 242 requires "the application of both of the following principles: withdrawal of Israeli armed forces from territories occupied in the war; and the right of every state in the area to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries free from threats and acts of force."

AS NOTED by many commentators, the exclusion of the definite article "the" before "territories" in the resolution means, and was intended to mean, that Israel is not obliged to withdraw to the pre-1967 borders.

This, of course, is not acceptable to the Arabs. Without going into the controversy here, suffice to say that the Arabs, foremost the Egyptians, saw in Resolution 242 an effective means of isolating and dismantling the State of Israel.

Under the banner of Resolution 242, a diplomatic offensive was wag-ed for the recovery of the territory lost in the Six Day War. In the words of the semi-official "Al-Ahram" (December 29, 1967), the first phase "aims at liquidating the results of the June 67 aggression without losing sight of the aim of liquidating the results of the aggression of May 48 (the establishment of the State of

This two-step strategy was repeatedly enunciated by Nasser; for example: "The Arab nation has decided to embark on the path of UN Security Council Resolution 242 struggle and war... We will move on to the containment of Israel, and after that to ... its eradication."

Following the strategy of his predecessor. President Sadat stunned the world on February 15, 1971, in his aide-memoire to UN Ambassador Gunner Jarring, which declared Egypt's readiness to enter into a "peace agreement with

This overture aroused Western sympathy for Arabs, elicited powerful diplomatic support, wrested the initiative from Israel, and made Israel appear as the real warmonger in the Middle East.

As usual, the offer was made contingent on the achievement of what Sadat called a "just" settlement for the "Palestinians" and the "full and scrupulous" implementation of UN desiderata - including, of course, the Arab interpretation of UN Resolution 242 calling for Israel's total withdrawal to the pre-1967 borders.

As Professor AlRoy notes: "The overture to Jarring was explained in the Arab world as a manoeuvre to deepen Israel's isolation in the international community, and the point was made repeatedly that the final option was not closed, though Egypt may have to make some temporary concessions to win back the Sinal." (It is in this light that we are to understand Sadat's avowed willingness to establish diplomatic relations relations will be temporary indeed.)

SOON AFTER the aide-memoire was delivered, Sadat's confidente. Hassannin Heykal, explained in an editorial in "Al-Ahram" (February 25, 1971): 'There are only two welldefined goals on the Arab scene: erasing the traces of the 1967 aggression by Israel's withdrawal from all the areas occupied by it in that year and erasing the aggression of 1948 by

"This is not really a well-defined goal, but an oversimplified one; and the mistake of some of us is starting off with the last step before begin ning the first."

Israel's total and absolute annihila-

Speaking three days later before the National Council of Palestine, Sadat declared: "The liberation of the territories (lost in June 1967) is what we have chosen for this stage. Revolutionary Arab thought must define the stages of a consistent and diligent policy out of the necessity that all the various strategies used in the confrontation with the enemy should flow out of one grand strategy. This will assure the victory of the Arab will."

Lest it be thought that Sadat was merely trying to placate the PLO, he had this to say before the Egyptian National Council on June 2, 1971: "The Zionist conquest to which we are being subjected will not be terminated by the return of the occupied territories. This is a new Crusaders' war which will persist during our generation and through the coming one. It is our duty... to arm and fortify the new generation and equip it with the strength to be able to continue the struggle after we are gone."

BECAUSE Sadat's strategy calls for the piecemeal destruction of Israel, it requires flexibility and patience, qualities not ordinarily attributed to Arabs by Western observers. Yet, even Farouk Kadoumi of the PLO is following the line of Sadat's "peace offensive."

In an interview with "Newsweek" magazine (March 14, 1977), he openly declared: "We have to be flexible in order to establish peace in this part of the world. So we have to accept, in this stage, that we have this (Palestinian) state on only part of our territory. But this doesn't mean that we are going to give up the rest of our rights.

"There are two (initial) phases to our return. The first phase to the 1967 lines, and the second to the 1948 lines (i.e., the UN partition lines). The third stage is the democratic stage of Palestine. So we are fighting for these three stages." The third stage means, of course, the total extinction of the Jewish state.

This stage-by-stage dismantling of the only democracy in the Middle East requires unremitting pressure political, diplomatic and psychological. This is a strategy of protracted war.

In the words of a Soviet handbook, it necessitates "the uninterrupted attack; its means, prolonged operational pursuit, which avoids pauses and stops, and is attained by a succession of consecutive operations, each of which serves as a transitional link toward the ultimate goal," which is "the complete annihilation of the vital forces of the enemy." Here, the language of war describes the Arab strategy of

THE DEVELOPMENT of this stratery was facilitated by the Yom Kippur War of 1973. Sadat's objective in that war was not to destroy Israel but to inflict upon her a political defeat, to shatter her domestic morale and, at the same time, to undermine her diplomatic standing in the world, especially with the U.S.

As early as April 30, 1971, Robert Conquest predicted, in testimony before Senator Henry Jackson's subcommittee on national security and international operations, that the Soviet Union would seek to orchestrate "the political defeat of Israel and the opening of the (Suez)

A political defeat having this geostrategic objective could only be accomplished through a war having limited military aims, namely the crossing of the canal and the holding of its east bank. Soviet and Egyptian objectives coincided perfectly.

Meanwhile, with Soviet encouragement, the Arabs employed the oil weapon against the U.S. Western Europe and Japan. This provided the material incentive for the democracies to abandon democratic Israel.

Only lacking, for men of democratic conscience, was a moral motive for taking the side of the Arabs. This was supplied by the Arab slogan of self-determination for the so-called Palestinian people. All that was needed to complete Israel's isolation was for well-oiled Arab propaganda to speak the language of "peace."

Washington's policy of "evenhandedness," meaning American pressure on Israel, followed as a matter of course. Applied with telling effect at Camp David, it reached its climax with President Carter's trip to Jerusalem in March 1979.

Sunday: Israel's "response" to the new Arab strategy.

THE participation of the released Soviet prisoners of Zion in the torchlighting on Independence eve provides a dramatic counterpoint to the central theme of this year's ceremony.

Twelve of the 18 citizens chosen to light the torches are the scions of families whose histories are interlaced in the fascinating panorama of the continuity of the Jewish presence in Palestine. The youngest of these families arrived in the country 150 years ago — 50 years before the "First Aliya." The oldest (Zinati, of the village of Peki'in in Galilee) is believed to trace his ancestry back to the destruction of the Second Tem-

Most of them belong to the immigrations of nearly 500 years ago when, in the wake of the Inquisition and subsequently of the advent of the at-first-friendly Ottoman Turks, a substantial and indeed brilliant chapter was written in the history of .thp.Wishun Wrien the Lurisa to the Rivlins, from the Elizchars to the Salomons; dromi the Burles to the Becks, a wide range of vibrant Jewish life persisted and, in the face of indescribable pressures. prohibitions and persecutions, was renewed again and again over the

The lighters of the torches are also the neglect of that continuity both in Zionist literature and in the education system in Israel. Recalling that continuity recalls also the fabric of mendacity spun by the Arabs in claiming an overlordahip in the Land of Israel — an overlordship which never existed. It reminds us how closely we are enveloped in a cloud of pretence and untruth about the affinity, and the rights, of the Jewish people to the country — and how pretence and untruth influence even the attitudes of responsible statesmen. For example in the United States.

The Jewish state would have to be dismembered incrementally or in stages, and not only by war, but by means of "peace"; by means of a "peace offensive" designed to divide

Israel from the West, especially from her major arms supplier, the amounts in effect to a demand for an imposed settlement by the great powers — a kind of compulsory surgery on the conference table, in which Soviet arms (for the most part) would wield the knife, while American diplomacy had ad-ministered the anaesthelic."

What was to provide the legal basis for this strategy was one of the consequences of the Six Day War —

ON HIS RECENT visit to Jerusalem. the American President, taken aback by Mr. Ariel Sharon's remark that there would be a million Jews in Judea and Samaria, was even more surprised by the Agriculture Miniater's further remarks (reported by Sidney Zion and Uri Dan in "The New York Times Magazine," April 8).

"You have a clear plan," Sharon told him, "to create a Palestinian state. But you cannot force us or convince us to allow it. There is now a Palestinian state. It consists of three-fourths of the land mass of Palestine, as determined by the League of Nations. Palestine was partitioned by a British trick in ing in Jordan, nearly all are Palestinians. It you count the Beduins as Palestinians — and why not, they were born there - then everyone in Jordan is a Palestinian, except maybe the Hashemite King in, because his dynasty was imported by the British from Arabia. So a Palestinian state on the 'West state.

Carter (the narrative goes on) turned to his national security ad-viser Zbigniew Brzezinski: "Is what he says correct?" Brzezinski agree that the area now known as Jordan had originally been part of the Palestinian Mandate.

What else, then, does the Preside of the United States not know about

ONE GLIMMER OF LIGHT

The failure of Israel's diplomatic and informational efforts abroad to counter distorted Arab assertions has been accompanied by a failure in education at home, writes SHMUEL KATZ.

the subject on which he adopts attitudes which could be fateful for the future of Israel and the Jewish People - and at least of great consequence to his own country? It is inconceivable that he had never, never heard that Palestine encompassed both sides of the Jordan, and that when the new era began for the Middle East with the dismantling of the Ottoman Empire, the promises and pledges made to the Jewish people related to Palestine in its entirety.

Is it possible that he does not know that both eastern Palestine and (in spite of the pleadings of his own predecessor President Wilson) the southernmost strip of Lebanon to the Litani River, were excised by the British from the territory of Palestine as a function of their then ongoing feud with France?

When the French drove King Feisal out of Damascus and thus upset the British plan for the distribution of territories and kingly crowns to the sons of the Hashemite family, the British decided to compensate him with the crown of Iraq which they had previously promised to his brother Abdallah. Abdallah, thus bereft, had to be given compensation later. The British installed him in eastern Palestine, and helped him by gradual stages build up what subsequently became the independent Kingdom of Transjordan (later, after the rape of Judea and Samaria, rechristened Jordan).

It is true that Abdallah's grandson, King Hussein, one of the foremost fairy-tale spinners in the Middle East, does not blink an eyelid when referring to his kingdom as though it has existed as an independent Arab state for at least hundreds of years. Does Carter not know that this is a

Is it indeed conceivable that the president does not know that neither eastern nor western Palestine have ever in the past been the sovereign national territory of Araba; and that even in the short and single period of Arab rule — by the Ommayads in the 7th and 8th centuries — it was, like many of the other Arab conquests an unconsidered part of a sprawling empire? Is it conceivable that Jimmy Carter, a man of religious sensitivity, is not alive to the historic on that throughout the 19 centuries in which the Jewish people

was unable to assert and realize its rights to the land, nor to prevent any other people from establishing itself there — no other people did, in fact, assert or establish such a claim or, in the end, lift a finger to restore the ruins, drain the swamps and fractify the deserts, to which it had been reduced by centuries of alien rule

CARTER'S appeal to Brzezinski for confirmation of Sharon's remarks makes all these questions (and many more) valid. Are they important? Are the answers important? Of what importance is history? What is important, many of our self-proclaimed realists insist, is reality.

The fact is that not only is history "important." It is the very warp and woof of Arab propaganda and claims; and it has become central to the fabric of American policy. Is it unimportant when an American president talks freely of "the Palestinian problem' and of a Palestinian state as its solution that he is not — nor pretends not to be — aware that there is already in existence a Palestinian state (itself carved out of what had been internationally intended as the reconstituted Jewish state).

When Sadat writes to Carter (as he did in the wake of the Camp David agreements) that "Arab Jerusalem is an integral part of the West Bank" and that "legal and historical rights in the city must be respected and restored" he is giving him a lesson in history which he insists must bring about a change in the reality.

Rights that should be "restored" are by definition rights that existed some time in the past. Does it make no difference that the "historical" substance of Sadat's letter is a complete fabrication, a part of the Arab mythology which could not stand up to five minutes of questioning? Does it make no difference that American policy itself actually flaunts Arab mendacity as though it were historic

According to the American president and his spokesman, Jerusalem is "occupied Arab territory". This is untrue, it is a primitive distortion of history. It is, as it happens, a mindless echoing of the Arab falsehood, and it contradicts the American position on Jerusalem as maintained since 1948. The U.S. to this day refuses to recognize West Jerusalem as part of Israel and as Israel's capital, and refuses to move its embassy to Jerusalem, because it clings to the recommendation in the long-dead partition scheme that the city of Jerusalem (all of it) should be international. If Jerusalem is "international," how does its eastern part come to be "occupied Arab territory?"

It is superfluous to labour the point. It is by misrepresenting history that the American administration provides itself with the moral fig-leaf for the real reason for its adoption of the Arab myths — and indeed for the brazenness of some of its propaganda against Israel.

BUT THE Arab myths have taken root, the policy of falsifying history has paid dividends because successive Israeli governments have failed to resist it. Neither Israel's diplomatic policy nor what goes for her information policy has ever dealt seriously, intelligently and with dignity, with the task of establishing the historic truths, and the demolition of the monstrous lies on which in the end international policy towards Israel rests its case.

Israeli governments have failed to grasp that whatever the immediate pragmatic considerations that govern policy, its justification is conceived in history. The Arabs have understood this. The Arabs have not contented themselves with flourishing the oil threat. They have not confined themselves to petrodollar blackmail. They have fabricated a complete historic lie and invested astronomic sums of money to finance its dissemination. They have injected their myths without hesitation or embarrassment into their diplomatic activity as though they were self-evident truths. Israeli diplomacy and Israeli information have given the Arabs an almost completely clear field to build up an altogether fictitious and monstrous version of the dispute.

There is no rational reason for this Israeli failure. There is no rational reason why in many years of diplomatic conversations and exchanges, Israel should not long ago have insisted on the elimination of patent historical falsehoods from which American policy draws sustenance. There is no reason why an American president should even be able to pretend surprise or ignorance at the remark made by Sharon. There is no rational reason for the Israeli government's failure to give a crushing, yet sophisticated, reply even to the fiction assiduously disseminated from Washington that Jewish settlement in J Samaria, Gaza and the Golan is

The failure of information policy abroad has been accompanied (though in lesser degree) by failure in education at home. The ignorance of a substantial portion of the population, including many of those educated in Israel, is not merely heartbreaking, it is dangerous to the future of our people. The lack of awareness not only of our historic roots, but of our modern political history and the history of Jewish international relations since we came upon the world stage as a modern nation; and the ignorance of Arab history, and of the truth of the Arab relationship with Eretz Yisrael are widespread.

A common consequence of such ignorance is the mindless parrotting of the relentlessly asserted Arab fabrications.

THE PRESENT minister of education is no doubt aware of the problem. The degree to which educa-tion programmes, are amended to give the student a balanced store of knowledge on the crucial issues of our presence in Eretz Yisrael will be a measure of his success.

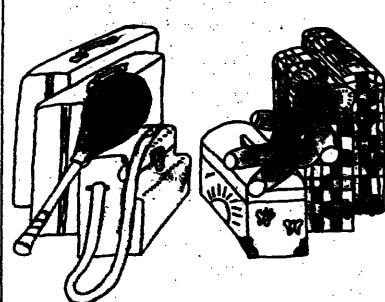

The decision to reflect at the torch lighting ceremony one vivid aspect of that presence is a step in the right

IT IS NOT often that we Israelis are instructed that it is our patriotic duty to enjoy ourselves: we are generally admonished that life is real, life is sarnest, and pleasure is not the goal. Most of the time there is some sort of war on, or we have to tighten our belts to help the finance minister do something or other that he thinks he has to do if we are to keep going, or there is some other reason for hearts to be sad and faces to be glum.

A sort of stient struggle goes on between the gloomy authorities and the hedonists, with the latter using the utmost ingenuity to snatch some fleeting moments of enjoyment from the grim, grey depression suitable to the state of our affairs.

But this week things were very different. The prime minister, in his excellent address to the nation, made it clear that we had to have a good time, whether we wanted to or not. Peace had been achieved with Egypt, the Prisoners of Zion had come home. As Milton had put it, the time had come for loathed melancholy to go hence, and for jest and youthful joility to take over.

The television programmers seemed at first to be sensitive to the new mood, what with Alexander Schneider replacing Rudolph Barshai as conductor of the Jerusalem Orchestra in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 5. Without reflecting in the slightest degree on Barshai, I must say that I can think of no living conductor, apart perhaps from Zubin Mehta, who gets such a kick out of making happy music as Schneider. And the fifth — "Emperor" — concerto was ideal for the occasion.

THE REASON why Prime Minister Menshem Begin came out so strongly for Finance Minister Simbs. Ehrlich at the last Likud-Knesset faction meeting was, I learn, a matter of over-reaction to trial balloons floated by various Likud politicians suggesting Ehrlich and Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan be dropped with Deputy Premier Yigael Yadin, however unbelievable, replacing Dayan and Ehrlich shifting to the Deputy Premiership, the latter being rep ed by Begin's old deputy Ya'acov Meridor. Begin saw in these moves an attempt to get at him and reacted swiftly to snuff what seemed a mini-

The two most noted ministerial disappearing acts abroad of recent weeks are those of Dayan and Interior and Police Minister Yesef Burg: both were conveniently out of sight for some rather crucial voting. Begin's aides firmly deny that Dayan's sortie into the Far East had anything to do with the Premier handing the cabinet autonomy com-mittee, and thus the negotiations, to the NRP leader. Instead they blame Dayan's spokesman, Naftali Lavi for "stirring up trouble" between Begin and his Foreign Minister. Most convenient, especially after Begin's initial "thundering silence" over Dayan's talk on concessions on the Golan Heights, the Prime Minister chose to line up behind him under the withering Likud-Labour attacks.

Some Beginologista contend that.

Dayan was only doing Begin's dirty work in seeking to open up talks with President Hafes Assad of Syria — all not to have to make any concessions over the West Bank. Burg's departure for other lands is less mysterious. Party insiders explain that the 70-year-old minister regards it as his main fringe benefit

Interestingly, Dayan was busy talking to a number of fellow generals-turned-politicians prior to his Far East trip, such as Meir Amit that classics are reserved for tragic moments, like the death of an eminent leader; the only exceptions I remember, apart from Tuesday night, were last year's concert near the Old City wall and Mehta's peace party, repeated on Wednesday.

SO, BETWEEN the prime minister and the "Emperor," the celebrations got off to a good start.

Then came "Leil Ha'esrim." This may have been a magnificent drama, for all I know, because I am not a fair judge of its merits. I felt like the students in Jerome K. Jerome's "Three Men in a Boat," listening to a German lied which they had been told would be excruciatingly funny, and laughing accordingly, while the singer described sailors being lured to their deaths by the Lorelei. I had told other people watching with me that we were going to see a modern comedy (and in colour, too), so we were all set for some hearty belly laughs. At first it struck me that the humour was rather deadpan, a sardonic satire on the mores of earnest halutsim debating about life and love through the night.

I told everyone that jokes would soon become clearer. But the film got gloomier and gloomier and er. There were two occasions when I thought that the switch into boisterous humour was about to occur — the girls began to do a striptease. So we perked up and started to laugh. But the men leapt to their feet, and instead of helping the action along, stopped the strip dead in its tracks. They were strange creatures, like the pioneers of the

I would like to see the film again on a more suitable occasion, such as the eve of May 1, which a friend on my kibbuts once described as the Socialist Yom Kippur. Then I will be able to judge it on its merits.

A far more suitable film for Independence Day was "Halahaka," which had just the correct mixture of slapstick, songs and sex we needed for the occasion.

I had seen it before in the cinema, and had thought then that the plot was too infantile to warrant suspending disbelief for a space, but on Wednesday night I realized that the key issue — who would sing solo in the programme? — was by no means Just before the film, we saw; on Dan Almagor's "I Sing of Thee, My Country," that the great stars who troupes. Whoever sung the solo could expect to be the queen of the pops some day. MY ENJOYMENT of "Halabaka" was intensified because I happened to know something that nobody in the film knew - the real star of the future was Gali Atari, playing a wistful sort of walf and low down in importance in the group. I felt like leap-ing into the television set, like a character in a cartoon, to reassure her that she was destined to win the Eurovision contest with "Hallelyjah," so it did't really matter if she heard her best friend saying mean things about her when she, Gali, indulged in some rather nasty

I must say that my heart bleeds for Tuvia Tsafir whenever I see him acting a straight part: I am so used to his being so good a mimic that, when I saw him in"Halahaka," I felt that I was watching Tuvia Tsafir taking off Tuvia Tsafir acting more the part of a man running the troupe; his credibility was undermined before opened his mouth.

Talking about mithiery, I must in-terpose some hallshjahs for Dubbi Gal on "Another Hit" on Sunday night: his Knesset debate, with him playing several roles, was one of the funniest things in the history of Israeli humour. It deserves to be immortal, like the Bible quiz run once by Arik Einstein on "Lool," which has made it so difficult to look at Bible quizzes without bursting into laughter. Dr. Yosef Burg's comment about a competitor on Wednesday's Junior Bible quiz, "We give him the

but he still wants a long argument with us!", was straight out of

But I digress. I haven't finished with "Halahaka." I must mention that the person who provided the English captions enjoyed the finest sinecure of all time: he translated every Hebrew expression into two four-letter words and one five-letter word. It was a cinch for him, but it was rather distracting for anybody who understood Hebrew and could read English.

DAN ALMAGOR made a great programme of his interpretation of the history of the 1960s through the songs we sang in those days. He was in scintiliating form, and got off to a great start by inviting Yardena Arazi to translate his remarks into French, in imitation of her own Eurovision performance. Smoothly and artfully. Dan showed how the evolution of Israeli society and developments in our history were reflected by popular songs.

The road we took from the "Song! Songs" to the 10th anniversary celebrations was a very pleasant one. We went south to the Arava, Dimons and Ein Gedi, gathered cot-ton with Marcelle, checked the latest vital statistics of Dina Bazzliai, built the railroad from Na'an to Beersheba, and learned what had become of Sinaya. There was never a jarring moment, and Dan's expertise was matched by very good singing. Now that he is back on the job, I hope that he will carry on giving us his sugar-coated pills of history up to the present date.

The decision of the omnipotent "they" to allow us some meed of colour was applied rather capriciously: there did not seem to be any system to it. Thus one song programme was in colour and one was in black and white; the same principle applied to the two films. Fortunately for us, the Hapoel Games came first in the colour

I say "fortimately" because, after seeing the live programme in colour in the afternoon, I saw some of it repeated in black and white on the news. I hope that the deputy prime minister and all the others who are opposed to letting some colour penetrate our dull lives had the same experience. The live reportage showed us one of the most exciting and joyous events I have ever seen on the screen. I cannot say whether the real thing was enjoyable: some of the spectators looked rather bored. But, from where I sat in my armchair, the show moved with pace, swirling colours and grace.

There were some curious aspects to the photography. At one or two spots it seemed as if the hotographer was playing around with filters. And, for some reason, he had a tendency to take long shots when we wanted close-ups, as when the Danish gymnasts put on their remarkable performance. Then he would do the opposite — a close-up instead of a long shot. At one critical moment, the camera swung off the jumper to show us faces in the

But these were minor blemished; It was a great show, with Danny Pe'er in good form as he provided a commentary without showing himself in the flosh.

CONSIDERABLE public debate is raging about the propriety of ahous ing us on the Friday night magazing the woman from Nahariya who smothered her child rather than allow it to cry, because the notes would have endangered everyone is hiding from the terrorists. I must confess that I am in two minds; On the one hand, it was clearly a new story and a human feature of impertance, and the public does have the right to know everything. On the other hand, there is an instinctive reaction that such feelings should not be bared to three million viewers, before this woman has had a chance to think clearly about what she is saying. So I can formulate no clear opinion.

ON A HAPPIER note; it was kind of Television House to give our young ones "Winnie the Pooh and the Honey Tree." It startled me to hear Pooh, Cristopher Robin and the others talking with American accents; I had always thought of them as very British. Once this prejudice had been overcome, however, I thought that the film was done with style and sensitivity.

A NEW GROUP with possible political ramifications has come into being. It is called "The 5th of Iyar," and its founding members wish to ensure that individual rights, the equality of all citizens and the supremacy of the law be maintained under the spirit of our Declaration of Independence proclaimed by David Ben-Gurier on the 5th of lyar, 1946.

The group's first meeting was hosted by Shulamit Aloni MK at her Swedish prefab Kfar Shmaryahu home, but it is not identified with any one party; its founders include: Prof. Yaacov Lorch, Haim Barksi, Prof. Yoram Dinstein, and Yonatan Shapiro: architect Moshe Safdie, writers Yoram Kantuk, Haim Hefer. and Menahem Perl; Gerahon Weiler: criminologist Menahem Amir, Haim Skirball or the Reform movement, ex-MK Boaz Moav, with such diverse personalities as Mordechai Virshubsky MK (Shai) and Aluf (res) Israel Tal coming out in their support against current attempts to undermine the norms of the Declaration of Independence.

Dinstein, Dean of the Tel Aviv University law school, was so concerned at upcoming legislation that last week he took a gaggle of law professors to see Justice Minister Shmuel Tamir to advise him that his bill on the foundations of law, which seeks to replace our courts' tie with British precedents by ancient Halachic rulings, might rupture our links with international law. Tamir reportedly was a good listener as his guests warned against the draft legislation of Religious Affairs Minister Aharon Abu-Hatseira which would limit the High Court's authority in favour of the rabbibical courts, and indeed prevent recourse on some personal matters to the High Court.

NRP SECRETARY-GENERAL Danny Vermus is highly gratified at the success of Ya'acov Hasdai in promoting his reform movement across the country. Hasdai wants the same as us, Vermus told me, especially the imposition of a Halachic society, and to this end has launched the non-observant membership division of the party, which Vermus trusts will help the NRP rope in many more votes. One hears that both Begin and Defence Minister Exer Weizman are most unhappy with the recent political statements delivered by O.C. Northern Command Aluf Avigor (Yanush) Ben-Gal, especially over the Jordan-PLO conborder situation as well has not advanced his early claim on the succession to the post of Chief-of-Staff when incumbent Ray-Alui Raphael (Raful) Eltan retires to his moshav farm and carpentry workshop. Ben-Gal is the wealthlest of our officers (Ben-Gal radio etc.), and his neighbour in the Caesarea villa district is Industry, Commerce and Tourism Minister Gideen Patt. There are two candidates to succeed Eitan; O.C. Central Command. Aluf Moshe Levi, because of his great — he is a seven footer earned the nickname of "Moshe ve-Hetzi" (Moshe and half); or O.C. All the other witnesses were present from the time the wager was made, with Lee taking Kadishai's prize - a bottle of whisky for him. The Prime Minister's side still claims it was purely forfuitous that he chose March 13th as the peace talks deadline as far back as mid-January. He denies the story that he had already heard that President Jimmy Carter had set that date -Purim eve - because of the eclipse.

DAYAN HAS been widely applauded for choosing Yosef Harmelin as Israel's next Ambassador to Pretoria. Harmelin earned a reputation for sterling public work and integrity during his 10 years as head of our security services. More recently he served as our last chief of mission to Teheran, with all his household effects and library going up in flames there. Last week the appointment was celebrated at his 56th birthday party at a Chinese restaurant in Tel Aviv, together with wife, Sarika, who was in 1948 the first woman to become a rav-seren in the IDF, his brother-in-law, Cameri actor Yossi Graber, and sonin-law, Israel basketball star Moli Avissar. Harmelin will replace Yitzhak Unna, who returns home to Jerusalem after his difficult nineyear stint in South Africa, to serve Mayor Teddy Kollek in his inter-national work.

Moreover, it is complained Matalon knows neither Spanish, the language of Uruguay, nor does he have patience for Yiddish, the lingua franca of Uruguayan Jewry. It was pointed out to me that during his term as Israel's first secretary in Montevideo that President Navon learned Yiddish. I learn that Ehrlich pushed the Matalon appointment through.

The 135 correspondents assigned to the UN offices in Geneva have voted for an Israeli woman colleague, for a third term as vicepresident of their association: Sari Ranber of "Ma'ariv". In this capacity she hosted a luncheon meeting this month for Mubarak Allaf, the Syrian assistant director-general of the UN in Europe. Having earned a reputation for being virulently anti-Israel while Syrian Ambassador to the UN in New York, Rauber was interested to hear Allaf call for peace in the Middle East during his speech.

I LEARN that all that academic envy at Tel Aviv University over the Leslie Porter endowment of the Porter Institute for Poetics and Semiotics is caused by mixing up the sterling sign with lirot before the six millions involved. Notwithstanding charges of mit-picking from savants like Prof. George Steiner, they are going ahead with an international conference at the Ramat Aviv campus, involving heirs to such nistorical names as Elena Tolstoya-Segal and Prof. Janes Petefl. The conference will consider such mind-numbing subjects as "Fictive Exemplification, or What It Goes To The British delegation to the inter-

COMPULSORY VISITS

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, - Please accept my compliments for having had the civic courage of publishing Anatol Feldman's letter (April 19) about the compulsory visits by foreign dignitaries to Yad Vashem. The reluctance — not to say repugnance — shown by Dr. Kurt Waldheim during his visit there some years age should have served as a warning."

What I find still worse is the silence by the public about the visit President Carter was compelled to pay to Vladimir Jabotinsky's tomb Does really nobody care about such a blunder? Your contributor is right when he says that the world has forgotien Haman and Chmelnicky. But why delve in the past if we have so many more recent examples? To mention only two among the many massmurderers of the Jewish people, who still remembers Simon Petiurs of Ukraine or Ante Pavelic of Croatia? EMILIO TRAUBNER

AMERICANS FIRST

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir, - I agree wholeheartedly with the remarks made by Moshe Kohn in his article; "Americans first" (April 22), in which he commented on American Jewry's new attitude toward Israel, as reflected in the remarks of Morris Abram (April 6), a noted Jewish leader in the United

What is most interesting to note is that, as the U.S. increases the acceptable settlement" which is designed to assure a free flow of Arab oil to America in spite of any bothersome religious, historical, moral or security claims Israel may present, American Jews scramble to put distance between themselves and Israel. Mr. Abram even declares them "Americans first." thus answering the charge of dual loyalty before it is even levelled against

One only has to remember the Jewish leaders in Germany declaring that the Jews embodied the best characteristics of the German Most, or perhaps the pitiful Jews in Iran who marched in the welkinnings parade for Ayatollah Khomeini bearing signs of friendship and brotherhood, to understand where this attitude will lead to. No amount of tortured explanations will help the Gentile decide if the American Jew is really American or really Jewish. A few cold winters without fuel oil, a car that cannot be used because of a gas oline shortage, and a few recen historical precedents will enable him to make the correct decision, even if the American Jew cannot. Until the Jews in America realize just who they are - Jews - and what Israel is to them — their homeland - there will be many more statements like those of Mr. Abram. That they realize these things in time to avert tragedy we can only hope. DAVID RUBIN

TEL AVIV. - Following the pre-Independence Day fall in equities the share market carved out a moderate advance a most sectors recorded gains. In contrast to the experience of recent months when indexlinked bonds advanced smartly on the first day of the new month, bonds dropped yesterday. In some cases the losses were as high as 2 per cent. However, it is expected that the index-linked bond market will warm up with the approach of the 15th, at which time the index for April will be announced.

In the commercial bank group the Hapoalim shares came through with a twopoint advance. Leumi, IDB, Union Bank and General Bank all posted one-point gains. There was renewed interest in the Leumi shares as statistics showed initial demand in excess of ILI.6m.

Mortgage banks also came through with gains. Prices of the mortgage bank shares have been in a decline and relatively small demands were able to push prices by as much as 5 per cent. Ampal gained a full 5 per cent to 525. The Industrial Development Bank of Israel preferred shares were registered as 'buyers only' and their price was

Law and disorder

PRESIDENT CARTER'S repetition on Monday of his known view that Israeli settlement in the administered areas is illegal serves to clarify — if clarification is necessary — what is going to be the most ticklish subject of negotiation during the coming 12 months.

The subject of autonomy will have to be handled with infinite care. Prime Minister Begin has laid it down, for a start, that Israel will not take over land that is owned or cultivated by Arabs. The application of that principle is going to be a test of Israel's intentions.

Decisions concerning land ownership will thus be highly controversial. One thing is certain: they cannot be left to the discretion of any private group who have an ideological bee in their

Settlers in Kiryat Arba think it patriotic to assert Jewish rights over a building by taking it over. That is a riotous act, directed against the Israeli authorities. I should be treated as

This week a dozen disgruntled residents of Ophira, angry because they will have to vacate their homes in Sinai, resolved to seize by force a stretch of land next to the Arab village of Mi'ilya in the Galilee. The location is inside the Green Line. The land is claimed by Arabs, although this claim is contested by the Lands Authority.

If the families from Ophira want land, they should apply to the Lands Authority. Compensation for their imminent displacement from the Red Sea coast is a legitimate subject for discus-

They should not be permitted to create faits accomplis on the ground, not even if the stretches in question have no private owners, much less if their ownership clearly lies with the Arab

Such vigilantism, in the name of patriotism, whether in or beyond the Green Line, could endanger not only the peace, but the stability of government as well.

Rivadh's risky game

THE SHRILL tones of the latest Egyptian-Saudi Arabian dispute should be seen as an indication of the concern with which Egyptian President Anwar Sadat now views the breaking of relations between most of the Arab world and Egypt.

Egypt has shattered the three decade old taboo against recognition of Israel and Arab opposition was to have been expected. The extent of the opposition to Sadat is, however, greater than expected, and he has been equally upset by the central role Saudi Arabia has played in the formation of this opposi-

Yet, for all the shrillness and the exchange of calculated national and personal insults, worse has been heard in the conduct of intra-Arab relations over the years. Alliances and animosities in the Arab world are fluid and fragile. It would thus be well to await further developments before pronouncing judgement on who exactly is being isolated by whom.

Several things seem to be clear. Saudi Arabia which feels threatened primarily from Iraq and Syria to the north and from PLO groups from within is apparently seeking to woo these enemies rather than relying on the U.S. and Egypt to safeguard Sadat in turn is seeking to emphasize this basic enmity in attempting to break the strange alliance that is growing between Riyadh, Baghdad and Damascus.

The entire drama is also undeniably informed by a conscious attempt by Saudi Arabia to mount a challenge to Egypt's claim to primacy in the Arab world, and claim such dominance for itself. It seems likely that all of this ado will lead to demands from Washington for further far-reaching Israeli concessions and gestures to Sadat on the territories issue in order to weaken this

Such appeals should be given short shrift. The autonomy issue is thorny enough in its own right and should be negotiated on its own merits. Attempting to factor in the explosive element of intra-Arab political and personal competition may run the risk of overburdening the delicate fabric of the new-born Egyptian-Israeli peace.

THE BBC WORLD SERVICE report on the latest Nahariya outrage must have caused heads to roll in the newsroom. At least one of its early broadcasts broke the rules and described the perpetrators, repeatedly and exclusively, as terrorists.

The hope that Bush House might be adopting a new policy on the Izrael-Arab conflict was quickly dispelled. By next morning-and mulation of an oil policy by a producing country: the quantity of oil to be produced and the price to be charged for it. In determining both, two factors are involved: the revenue needs of the producer and the quantity of oil needed by the consumers.

These considerations are purely economic components which usually determine the quantities produced and the prices charged. It would therefore follow that if the revenue needs of the producer were greater than the oil needs of the consumer, the price would be low and the output high. If, on the other hand, the consumer needs for the oil were greater than the revenue needs of the producer, the price would be high and the quantity produced low. Yet if the price should be such as to affect adversely the economic stability of the consumer, the producer would be well advised to restrain himself from both increasing prices and decreas-

Political and emotional elements may of course override economic considerations. If a producer should nurture political and emotional objectives, his policies would follow other than economic determinants. Saudi Arabia's oil policy until 1973 was based on the principle that her oil was her own economic asset and should not be used for the political purposes of other Arab countries. Indeed, over the years, Saudi Arabia persistently resisted the efforts of the Arab League professionals to get her to use her oil in the Arab political

This determination was based not only on theory but also on bitter experience. In the emotional tide that engulfed the Arab world at the outbreak of the Six Day War, Saudi Arabia proclaimed a total embargo and forbade Aramco to ship any oil. But she discovered almost immediately that the embargo was a boomerang. Instead of affecting the Western consuming countries it seriously endangered her own economy, and she quickly called it

Moreover, to prevent such a possibility from occurring again, Saudi Arabia established in 1968, together with Kuwait and Libya (monarchical and conservative at the time), the Organization of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries (OAPEC) whose primary purpose was to keep oil as an economic asset of the producers and remove it from political involvements. The rigid requirements for membership automatically eliminated the other members of the Arab League, especially Egypt, thus removing the threat to the West's supply of oil.

UNTIL 1978, the economic determinants of production rate and price level conflicted with Arab political objectives, and the latter were rejected for the former. Moreover, Saudi Arabia did not aspire, at that time, to leadership of the Arab world, a role that was reserved for Egypt and her ruler Nasser.

Egypt and with the approach of the and payments.

1973 war two new elements entered into the situation: Egypt abdicated her Arab leadership role to make room for Saudi Arabia in order to bring oil into the Arab political struggle; the oil-producing countries were successfully pressing the Western oil companies, and obtaining better economic terms. For the demands of the consumers rose rapidly while their supplies decreased even faster.

Thus it appeared that the economic determinants of the Arab oil-producing countries headed by Saudi Arabia could be merged with the Arab political objectives to give a double advantage: higher revenue and leadership in the Arab world.

Under the emotionally charged atmosphere of the October 1978 war Saudi Arabia became the leader and the driving force of the Arab oil embargo proclaimed on October 16, 1973. The following day the price of oil was — for the first time in the history of the relations between the producing countries and the Western concessionary companies — unilaterally increased by the producers by 70 per cent. The victory seemed total, economically and politically, and Saudi Arabia was hailed as the undisputed leader of the Arab world.

However, her new position was not secure. Saudi Arabia was wesk militarily. The regime was exposed to internal and external dangers. Neighbouring Arab radical countries were ready to undermine the conservative, autocratic regime and even invade the country. Her only security was the U.S., with whom she had maintained until then close relations; and the American oil company Aramco was the source of almost all her revenue.

As long as she was closely connected with the U.S. she felt safe and well protected. But the major target of the oil embargo was the U.S., and continuation of the embargo could have brought about a break in relations, which would have meant losing the protection of the most important and powerful nation on earth. Moreover, the longer the embargo continued the more the radical members of the Arab League -Algeria, Libya, Syria and Iraq would become dominant, threatening Saudi leadership and influence and even endangering her regime.

ECONOMICALLY the outlook was not as bright as was originally anticipated. A 70 per cent increase in price was a wonderful achievement and greatly increased the revenue beyond the current needs of the country. However, when OPEC increased prices, at the end of December, by a total of about 400 per cent. Saudi Arabia recoiled. She planned to depend on oil income for the next 50-60 years, and such a huge jump would surely bring about the development of alternatives to oil.

Saudi Arabia therefore took steps immediately to reverse the process. The leader of the defiant proclamation of the embargo became the major force in bringing about its rapid termination, which was achieved. against strenuous and bitter opposition from the radical countries in the Arab League, on March 18, 1974. In accomplishing this, Saudi Arabia reestablished her good relations with

From then until December 1978, Saudi Arabia consistently advocated at all OPEC conferences, and outside them, a reduction or at least a freeze of oil prices. And until December, 1978 she succeeded in keeping oil prices frozen, even though inflationary pressures and devaluation of the dollar heavily eroded the producers' revenue. She also successfully resisted the many attempts by various members of

OPEC to replace the dollar as the standard currency for all oil prices

the U.S., and regained that country's

The returns of this policy were high and handsome. Relations with the U.S. became closer than ever; the major supplier of imported oil to the U.S. was Saudi Arabia; most of Saudi Arabia's oil revenue surplus investments were made in the U.S.: the major supplier of Saudi Arabia's arms, which included the most advanced types and cost tens of billions of dollars, was the U.S.; and the major contracts for gigantic Saudi development projects were awarded to American companies.

There could be no doubt that the Saudis were the "fair-haired boys" of the State Department. It was Saudi Arabia that would keep oil prices down; it was Saudi Arabia that would constantly increase production to meet the U.S.'s everincreasing demands for oil, even at a rate of 20 million barrels a day. Saudi Arabia also became one of the major pillars, along with Iran, of America's policy and presence in the

AS A RESULT of these developments and because of its ideological orientation, Saudi Arabia, even while attempting to mediate in inter-Arab conflicts, turned her back on the radical members of the Arab League and planned her future on very close association with

Nevertheless various Saudi spokesmen, especially the highly polished Minister of Oil and Mineral Resources Sheikh Yamani, issued from time to time not very subtle hints that the U.S. had better comply with Saudi wishes or the consequences would be higher oil prices and curtailed supplies.

Other spokesmen suggested that if the U.S. did not submit to Saudi desires the Saudis might withdraw their investments from the U.S. and purchase their armaments and technologies from European countries. Yet, in practical terms relations between the U.S. and Saudi Arabia grew closer every day.

Then came the collapse of Iran. the major support of U.S. strategy in the Middle East. The Americans were suddenly revealed as impotent to come to Iran's assistance; the Shah's regime was abandoned without any effort to save it. Saudi leaders began to have second thoughts about their protector. American passivity in the Iranian crisis might encourage opponents of the regime, both in the country and beyond its borders, to undermine it and topple it.

A series of moves were made which indicated that an alternative policy was being adopted. Saudi Arabia agreed at the Abu Dhabi OPEC conference in December, 1978, to a 14.5 per cent price increase spread in quarterly increments to average 10 per cent for the year. At the end of the first quarter an additional 5 per cent jump was ap-proved. And depending on the rate of flow of Iranian oil, additional advances might be expected in the coming months.

At the same time Saudi Arabia has definitely turned to the Arab radical states in an attempt to build a new Arab front. In the last few months there has been an accelerated movement of high ranking officials between Baghdad and Damascus and Riyadh. Indeed, Saudi Arabia seems to have abandoned her role as a moderator standing above Arab squabbles and to have joined the radical states in their opposition to Egypt's peace with Israel. It is not clear what she will do about her commitments of aid to Egypt; no doubt this uncertainty is intentional; but she has joined the radicals and imposed sanctions on Egypt. And, together with the other states, she is adding new sanctions almost daily.

THE MOVES against the U.S. have been unmistakable. Crown Prince and Deputy Prime Minister Fahd failed or refused to come to Washington, at the invitation of President Carter, and the reports from Riyadh did not confirm the American explanation that it was

Saudi Arabia at first increased production to make up part of the shortfall from Iran (though she added a surcharge on the additional of produced which was equivalent to the spot market price), she sober quently cut production to the level originally set for 1979 — 8.5 million barrels a day. This in spite of the dire predictions of U.S. Secretary of Defence Harold Brown and Energy Crar James Schlesinger Co. cerning the consequences of the shortage caused by the Iranian mon

page. On December 18, 1978, after , meeting of the Saudi Council of Ministers which discussed the OPEC decision on the price increase, Prince Fahd issued the following statement: "Saudi Arabia is despiy concerned that its decisions on oil matters should be logical, objective and based on sound economic principles which take into consideration the international economic situation and the problems of the developing countries. The Kingdom always regards oil as a means of benefiting our country, our nation and the world as a whole and we never consid taking emotional or sudden decisions, Saudi Arabia is conabout the world economy and the need not to damage it. This has been clearly established in the past and will be the basis of our actions in the future.'

The actions taken by Saudi Arabia in increasing the oil price and limiting production were clearly in conflict with the principles set out in the above statement and repeatedly asserted by other Saudi spokesmen when explaining their country refusal to increase prices and limit production.

It seems that Saudi Arabia has again been carried away by emotional considerations which might endanger her very future. If she continues to taunt the U.S. and rely on the Arab radical countries, the latter - with the support of the Soviet Union - might topple her present regime. What is not clear, however, is whether Saudi Arabia has really changed her basic policy and is ready to turn away from the U.S. Or are all these moves an exercise to bring about changes in U.S. policy which would enhance Saudi Arabia's position in the Arab world and in the world at large? It is not clear what Saudi Arabia wants from the U.S. America would not strengthen herself or Saudi Arabia by sacrificing Egypt and the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty. In fact, it's possible that Saudi Arabia may be gambling away her very ex-
